LYNDACAMPUS

The University of North Texas has adopted LyndaCampus, an online library of thousands of video tutorials, which expands the university's usage of Lynda.com. The online learning platform now is available to all UNT faculty, staff and currently enrolled students, announced the University Information Technology office today.

LyndaCampus provides specific features for higher education and offers thousands of Lynda.com courses on Microsoft, Apple and Adobe products as well as professional development areas such as project design and management frameworks, data analytics and logistics. New videos are added each week with up-to-date content to help keep people's skills current. LyndaCampus also includes closed captioning and searchable transcripts of the learning material for increased comprehension and ease of use.

The upgraded service now will provide UNT students and employees with 24/7 online training that can be used from campus, home or on mobile devices. For more information about how Lynda.com is used in higher education, see <https://www.lynda.com/academic/higher-education>.
